Speaker Carter's address to the 89th General Assembly:

I would like to begin by first thanking the staff of the Old State House Museum for helping us make this a reality.

Special thanks to Director Bill Gatewood, Site Manager Ed Garretson, Education Director Georganne Sisco, and Matt Rowe with the museum's communication office.

This is not just an important day for us but for the museum as well. I just came from a press conference where the museum announced it has again received accreditation by the American Alliance of Museums. A recognition that only 3% of all museums in the country can boast.

Since we announced our change of venue for this Special Session, many of you may have already been reading up on its history. But for those who don't know, let me tell you a little about the significance of this building.

When work began on the State House in 1833, Arkansas was still mostly a wilderness and Little Rock boasted a humble collection of log cabins. But the people of Arkansas chose to house their new government in a building reflecting the glory and democracy of ancient Greece. Material for the building was gathered locally and bricks were made onsite.

This building was the birthplace of our state government. Inside these walls, our predecessors debated slavery, succession, and suffrage. Outside these walls, there is a canon reminding us of the Brooks-Baxter war where violence erupted over who was our Governor as this state entered Reconstruction.

The history hasn't always been pretty and this building hasn't always been in this exquisite.

In 1890, the only complimentary thing said about the appearance of the building in the Guide to Little Rock, published in 1890, was "The prettiest thing about the State House is the lovely little park in front of it."

And when the legislature did move to our current state Capitol, the Governor was quoted as saying the appearance of the Senate Chamber here was that of an old coal bin.

But Arkansas did not give up on this building. When state government moved into the new capitol building in 1912, members of the Legislature threatened to sell the Old State House. To forestall such efforts, Secretary of State Earl Hodges, gave space in the building to the University of Arkansas Medical Department.

Pioneering work of worldwide significance in malaria eradication occurred while The Old State House was home to the state's medical school. The legislature voted in 1947 for the Old State House to become a museum.

The world now knows this as a famous backdrop. It was here that Bill Clinton announced his candidacy for the presidency, and later celebrated his victory on election night in 1992.

Today, the Old State House Museum is the oldest standing state capitol building west of the Mississippi River.

The Old State House was placed on the National Register of Historic Places in 1969, and it was declared a National Historic landmark in 1997. The American Association of Museums renewed the museum's accreditation in 2003. And as I mentioned before, they were given this honor again this week.

And finally, it was here where our existing constitution was signed. A document that begins with "We, the People of the State of Arkansas, grateful to Almighty God for the privilege of choosing our own form of government; for our civil and religious liberty; and desiring to perpetuate its blessings, and secure the same to ourselves and posterity; do ordain and establish this Constitution."

Thank you to everyone who helped make this happen, let's continue to make our state proud with the work here in the next few days.

Speaker Carter announced:

In accordance with the provisions of Article VI, Section 19 of the Arkansas Constitution, no business other than that which is germane to the items in the Call of the Governor will be considered until all items in the Call have been disposed of.

Speaker Carter appointed the following named Representatives as the Committee to notify the Senate that the House in session and ready for business:
